Key points for

searching information

Use of Books:

internal collections (OPAC) , public libraries (OPAC) , domestic and international research institutes (Scopus , WorldCat , SFX, etc.)

Use of Articles:

via the web (Web of Science , Scopus ,) , on-campus holdings (OPAC) , off-campus holdings (Web of Science , Scopus , SFX etc.)

1-0. Introduction

Which previous studies should I read first? Ex: Searching for information about international relations on

How do I read a difficult book?

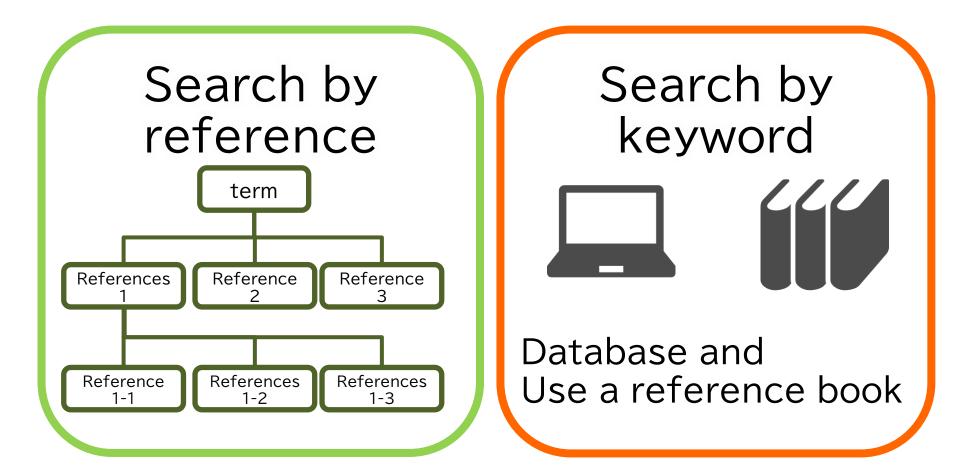

Ex: I was told that a reading group for Kant → I borrowed a book but I don't understand it! What should I do?

In such cases, check the references and confirm.

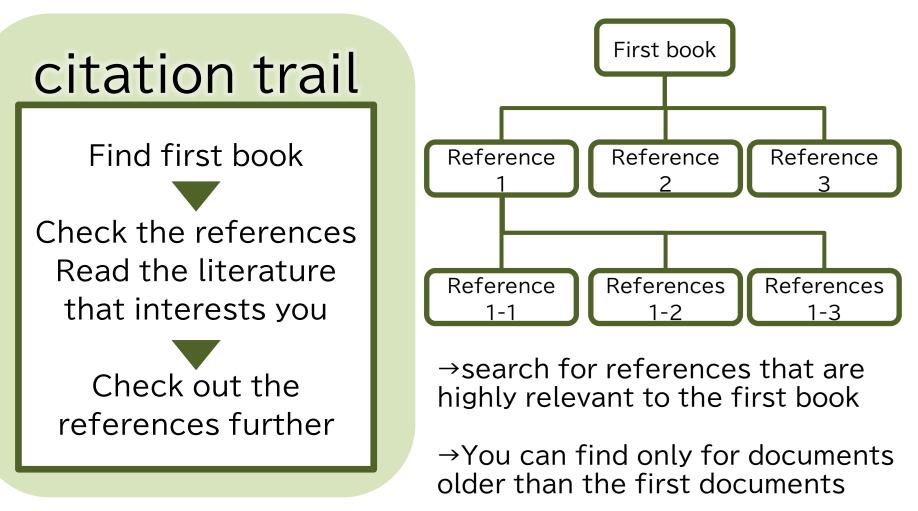

1-1. Searching Method

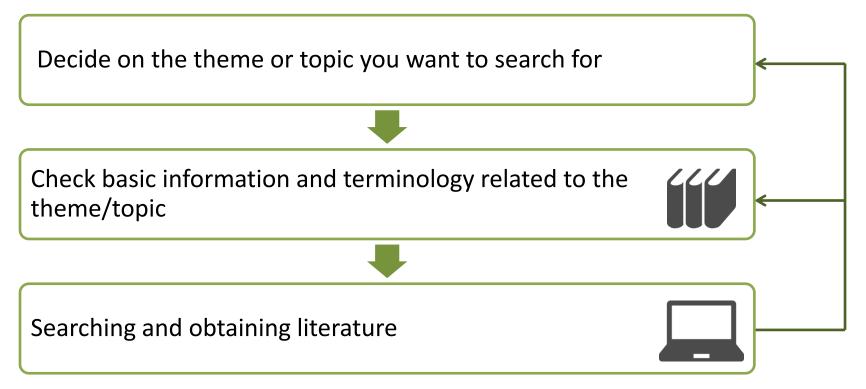

1-1. Search from reference

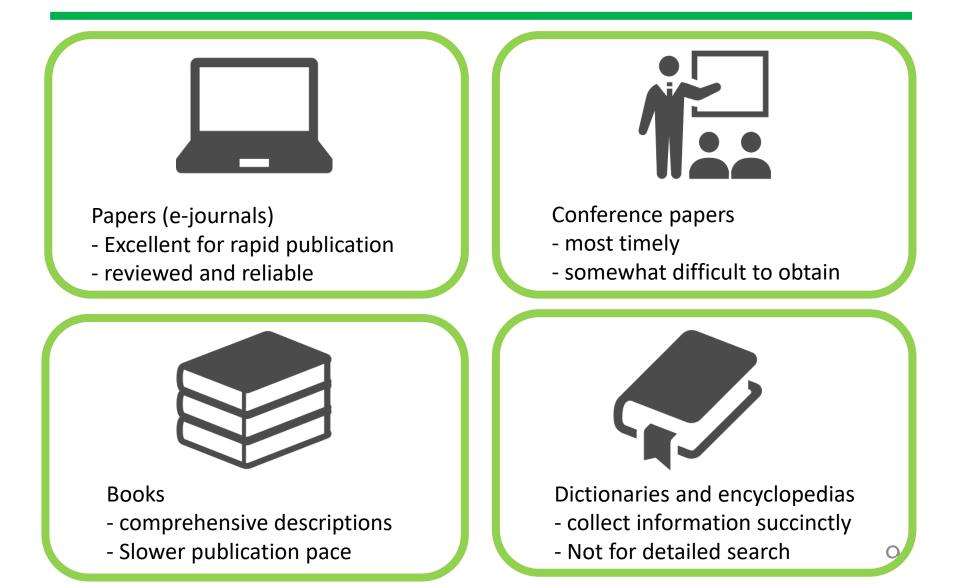

1-1. Search from keyword

- Search from old information to the latest information
- The key is what search keywords you use
 →Too many search results, it may be difficult to search

1-2. Types of sources

1-2. Types of sources

- Research results on selected themes
- The most important source of information in the field of academic research
- Published in an academic journal
- Excellent speed of reporting
- There is a peer review system

Proceedings

- Contents of presentations at conferences and academic societies
- Latest research findings
- Excellent speed of reporting
- It is difficult to obtain because it is not widely distributed.
- You can also restructure your conference paper and submit it to a journal. 10

1-2. Types of sources

- A summary of research results on a certain topic
- A substantial, in-depth, and comprehensive essay
- The speed of reporting is poor
- Many textbooks and handbooks are published .

Dictionaries encyclopedias

- A systematic arrangement of a particular topic
- Quickly find keywords
- However, the description is concise
- nderstanding keyword hierarchy is helpful.

1-3. How to find "entrance"

Know the keywords concisely

Search for keywords and get a clear idea of the content before reading the book.

→ When you find something difficult, try searching for a book using a broader keyword.

Example) Introduction to Criticism of Judgment < Introduction to Kant < Introduction to Western Philosophy

Read the abstract first

Almost every academic paper has f there is no abstract, focus on the introduction and conclusion.

Use of books

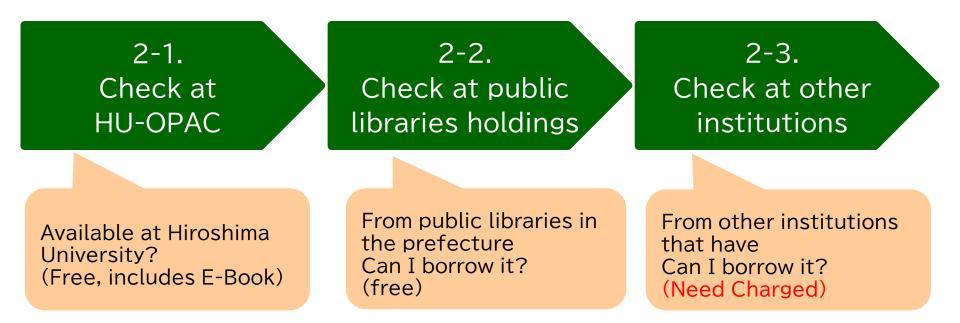

2. Use of books

2-0. Use of Books

There are basically three ways to obtain books !

<Procedure>

- 1. Enter keywords in the search box and search
- 2. Select the desired material from the search results list
- 3. Check the location \rightarrow Use books and magazines

If there are too many search results ...

To find information about books that are not held in Japan, you will need to conduct a cross-search in overseas databases .

Scopus

A database that allows you to search academic information from overseas, and allows you to search books across the board.

• WorldCat

A comprehensive search site for overseas library holdings. You can check the holdings of national libraries around the world.

* After confirmation, staff will order the material directly from the overseas library.

Search by specifying the publication date, author name, etc.

Use of articles

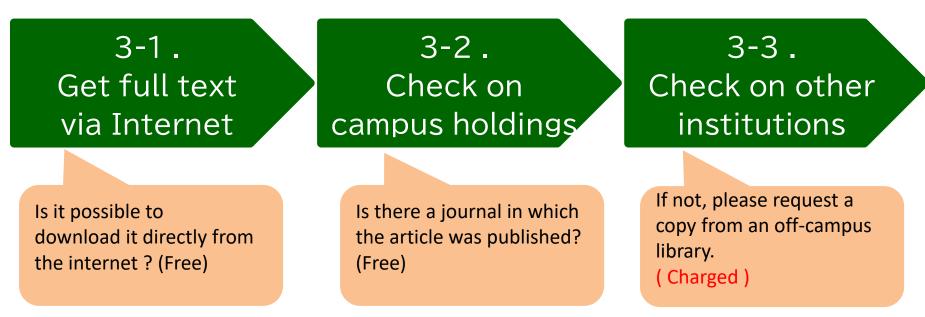

3. Use of articles

3-0. Use of articles

 * What is a paper? ... An article published in a magazine or other publication.
 * What is a magazine? ... A "periodic publication" that is published

periodically (such as Bungeishunju).

Just like books, there are basically three steps to obtaining a paper!

Web of Science

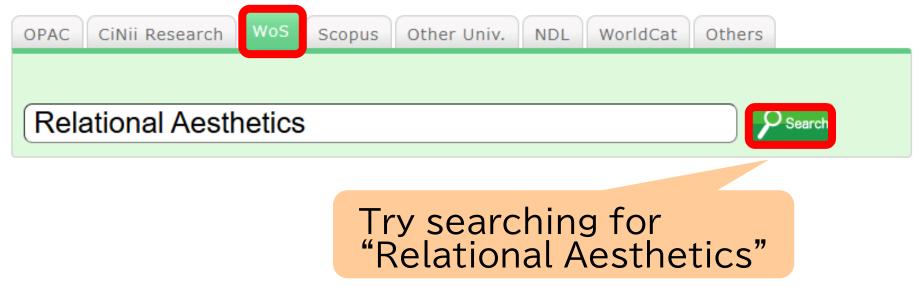

A meta-database that allows you to search academic information from around the world. Compared to Scopus, the number of journals is more selective and it has more detailed metadata. There are many mathematical science journals.

• Scopus

This is also a meta-database that allows you to search academic information from around the world. It contains a wider range of journals than WoS . You can search more books here.
